

Motion for TRC (expedited)

(please also x file in newest habeas action)

FILED - DSOC - NH
2023 APR 14 AM 10:12

My medications are still not correct, and if I need to stay here, I will only be able to litigate if I'm appropriately treated for both depression and ADHD, which is a lot more difficult than it should be when my under-qualified medical providers don't bother to read my chart. Somehow my effective distress gets lost in institutional politics of the go-getters around here shitting on selected patients/inmates in order to curry favor with the boss, which is obviously evidence of my own dysfunction.

2. This might be a moot issue if the court would order the SPU to release me to the community. This action is supported under law by

- (a) My lack of current diagnosis. I'm here because, 4 years ago, some fucking cop in Franconia diagnosed me as "emotionally disturbed", and decided to "help" me by instigating a criminal investigation. I'm still waiting on a more specific label, although I've been "seen" ("treated" would be a misnomer) by approximately 25 different state-funded medical experts. It's all been a waste of time.
- (b) I don't have a "treatment plan" per se although they're supposed to release one every 6 months or so. It's really not clear why I'm here. I ask this question repeatedly thru the formal grievance process & receive no answer.
- (c) The six to 12 month wait to "step down" to the hospital affects due process under Olmos v LC, not to mention Jackson v. Indiana, since it's not clear how a psychiatric institution will help me. It's not clear how the state can help me at all given that they stubbornly choose to underfund their so-called "hospitals" by hiring only part-time, bottom-of-the-barrel medical staff who can't find a better job elsewhere. To wit, the last APRN assigned to my case threatened to discontinue my medication as a kind of punishment, and actually did so, and was hostile & aggressive with me when I complained of severe PTSD sx's, including flashbacks & panic attacks. Ostensibly I'm only taking x, y, z because I "like" it, not because, through a painful process of trial & error, I've concluded nothing else works (she would draw the same conclusion if she were actually familiar with my history).
- (d) I can't receive specialist care because the medical "provider" (she's also not a doctor) doesn't know what a cytokine is, or, presumably, a natural killer cell, or how this might be implicated in an under-the-radar viral infection. An immunologist might know, but I don't get to see one. It took her a year to realize she was treating me with a hormone blocker because I have a brain tumor. I guess that's another medication I'm just taking for fun... These days she refuses to see me at all - which is somehow my fault?

Relief: The State needs to explain why I must continue to live here.

Mailed 4/9/23 to US Court - D.N.H. by Mr. Grace Woodham, plaintiff in pro per, Concord.